

Requiring all VI's to be RID certified is a terrible idea. Since when can the government dictate who an employer can hire?

As long as they pass "a" test – state or other- proving they can do the job, the Video Relay provider can choose to hire or not. If the company is hiring unqualified interpreters, the consumers are not stupid and they have options to take their business to another provider. Why do we need more government regulations?

My state – TEXAS – has a great test that is currently being used in other states as well. Who is the FCC to say that RID is a better system? I would beg to disagree!!! Think of the recent scandal where the RID test was compromised!

NO-NO-NO to RID certification requirement.
